OUTSTANDING SECONDARY SCHOOL HONOURED AT SHINE A LIGHT AWARDS FOR ITS COMMITMENT TO DEVELOPING CHILDREN'S COMMUNICATION

Hampstead School in the London Borough of Camden has been awarded the Secondary School / College of the Year award at a glittering awards ceremony in London, hosted by comedian David Baddiel, for its continuous commitment to developing student communication skills.

The 2015 Shine a Light Awards are a national awards scheme organised by Pearson, in partnership with The Communication Trust, to celebrate innovative work, inspirational individuals and excellent practice in supporting children and young people's communication development.

Hampstead School focuses explicitly on developing communication, speaking and listening skills through consistently promoting active listening and effective speaking among staff and students.

Since 2009, the school has worked with the borough's speech and language therapy (SLT) team, participating in their Listen-EAR (Enjoy, Achieve, Respect) approach, and appointing a teacher to ensure the approach is carried out across the whole school.

All year seven pupils receive an active listening lesson where teachers observe the children and feed back to the special educational needs (SEN) team, identifying any students who may need further support developing their communication skills. Outside of year seven, teachers are constantly observing their students, whatever year group students are in, referring to the SEN team when needed.

The schools leader for speech, language and communication needs (SLCN) works closely with the SENCO and the Camden SLT team to identify communication strengths and needs of students and which of their subject teachers require extra support and/or resources.

Hampstead School also works closely with an educational psychologist and a clinical SLT to ensure students who require extra communication intervention are recognised to allow the school to run appropriate activities such as Lego therapy (where the building blocks are used for increasing motivation to participate in social skills intervention, allowing children with social and communication disadvantages to effectively interact) and social communication groups.

All students in the school are encouraged to use their speaking and listening skills by the school running award schemes - 'star of the hour' and 'speaking and listening stars' - linked to effective use of speaking and listening, with teachers awarding a pupil at the end of each lesson.

The results have been outstanding, with lesson study and evaluations indicating that out of the students who had known SLCN, 89% made at least one sublevel of progress, 63% at least two sublevels and 36% more than two in their national curriculum levels. On self-rating scales, 118 students out of 179 rated improved listening, and school staff have reported students are able to listen better and are becoming more engaged in learning tasks.

Jacques Szemalikowski, Head at Hampstead School said: "I am delighted that our pioneering work in communications skills has been recognised. At Hampstead School we are determined that when learners achieve the qualifications to get them an interview, their ability to communicate with others secures the position".

David Baddiel, Host of the 2015 Shine a Light Awards, said: "Because of the important work that the Shine a Light 2015 winners and highly commended finalists have achieved, children and young people's language and communication development, especially for those with SLCN, has been supported.

"Speech and language problems too often go under the radar, so everyone should not only be congratulated for their work but for bringing this important issue to the attention of others. I would like to say well done to all those shortlisted who have shown true grit and determination to better themselves and others. They are all a true inspiration - keep up the good work."

Chris Hall, Director of Clinical Assessment at Pearson, says: "Congratulations to Hampstead School for winning Secondary School / College of the Year award at the 2015 Shine a Light Awards. Their commitment to communication across the whole school has clearly had a significant impact on children's development. Each year the applications get stronger and more inspiring. We have seen examples of children and young people with SLCN being supported by some truly inspiring individuals, groups and schools like Hampstead School.

"The Shine a Light Awards, now in their fourth year, continue to grow and we have been delighted to welcome an incredible judging panel who represent the very best of the education and SEN sector. To once again partner with the Communication Trust and celebrate these inspiring people and organisations is a real privilege."

Anne Fox, Director of The Communication Trust, says: "Congratulations to the winners and highly commended finalists whose work will help inspire and motivate people right across the country. Hampstead School is a wonderful example of what can be achieved when children and young people with communication difficulties are offered the support they deserve.

"We're delighted to have this partnership with Pearson, which allows Shine a Light to be a true celebration of the amazing work up and down the country and for helping the Trust to reach more children and young people and the professionals who work with them.

"The Shine a Light Awards are a key fixture for the speech and language sector as they reflect a range of best practice and innovative work taking place across the country. At a time when early years, health, education and SEN services are going through significant reforms, Shine a Light focuses attention on what can be achieved through expertise, sheer determination and never giving up on children and young people's potential."

Peter Sutcliffe, editor of SEN Magazine and category judge, said: “Staff training is high on the agenda at Hampstead School, with teachers being well supported to help pupils with SLCN with their academic and personal development.”
